When you head inside new Central Library, you'll be welcomed with a colourful and vast wall mural, a tremendous collaboration by Indigenous artists Keegan Starlight, Kalum Teke Dan, and Roland Rollinmud.

Inside the civic concourse, you'll find a thought-provoking life-size buffalo sculpture by Lionel Peyachew, made up of metal letters that spell various words in Indigenous languages. Nearby, you can sit on one-of-a-kind furniture that references the distinct communities within Treaty 7, made by Elijah Wells and Jessica McMann.

Head up the building, to Level 4, and you'll find the Elders' Guidance Circle, a space where anyone can access elders, Indigenous programming, and more. The room features a stunning table and distinct furniture by Glenna Cardinal and a large photo and text-based piece by Brittney Bear Hat.

The collaborative works by eight Indigenous artists — all from, or with a connection to Treaty 7 territory — will define these three spaces. The permanent art installations, part of a $500,000 Indigenous Placemaking project, will create a welcoming environment where Indigenous people can see their culture reflected, while visitors can learn about the original inhabitants of the land that is now Calgary. It's expected that more spaces for Indigenous art in new Central Library will be announced in 2019.

"This is a huge project, for Calgary Public Library, and the whole city of Calgary," says Jared Tailfeathers, Program Assistant for the Indigenous Placemaking Project. "We want to make sure that Indigenous people feel welcomed and important in Treaty 7, where Calgary lies, and where the new Central Library is."

The new Central Library is located in the East Village near the confluence of the Bow and Elbow Rivers, where Indigenous peoples gathered for thousands of years.

As part of the placemaking process, Library staff and members of the Indigenous Place Making Council of Canada met with multiple Indigenous communities in early 2018. From the get-go, the Library heard how important it was for the process to be community-driven, collaborative, and representative of all Treaty 7 communities: TsuuT'ina Nation, the Blackfoot Nations (Piikani, Kainai, and Siksika), Stoney Nations (Chiniki, Wesley, and Bearspaw), and Métis Nation Region 3.

Those early conversations led Calgary Public Library to adapt its approach, including forming an artist selection committee and elders' guidance circle. Tamara Cardinal joined the project as Artist Consultant. "What makes this process so unique is how community-driven it has been," says Teneya Gwin, Indigenous Services Design Lead at the Library.

All eight artists are now hard at work, creating Indigenous art in a Library on a scale never witnessed before. Come see their pieces for yourself starting November 1, 2018!

SKILLED SUPPORT

Growing up near Fish Creek Library, Lindsay Hracs would visit the pyramidal building often. "It's just somewhere I always gravitated to," she says.

Through university — a bachelor's and master's degree in linguistics — Lindsay would travel out of her way to study at the Library. Today, Lindsay is a PhD candidate in linguistics, and Fish Creek Library continues to be an important part of her life.

It's now where Lindsay volunteers with the Library's Learning Advantage program, helping an adult learner. Over weekly meetups in Fish Creek Library's breakout rooms, Lindsay and her learner work towards her learner's goal of attending university.

These days, they're reading Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone and working on information processing. When the pair was matched three years ago, the learner was getting by in daily life but struggling with reading and writing.

"There's so much stigma around not having perfect literacy skills that the acknowledgment of needing help is a huge hurdle in itself," Lindsay says.

Patricia Stephenson, Learning Advantage Program Coordinator, says people are often shocked to learn how prevalent low literacy rates are. Data from Statistics Canada shows that 17% of adults in Canada are essentially illiterate, scoring at level one or below on a system with five proficiency levels.

Through one-on-one coaching and support, volunteers with the free Learning Advantage program help others. Lindsay has seen her learner's literacy skills — as well as her independence and confidence — blossom.

For Lindsay, the meetups have become a favourite part of her week. "When you have a personal connection with someone and you can help them meet their goals, it's just so worth it," she says.

While Lindsay brings a deep interest in language and the mind to the volunteer role, such a background is not necessary. "Anyone who has time and enjoys books and reading can do this, and I think they should do it," Lindsay says. "It's awesome."

If you'd like to join the Library's team of youth or adult volunteers, please call Volunteer Resources at 403.260.2632 or visit calgarylibrary.ca/volunteer. To become a learner in the program, please call 403.260.2729 or email learningadvantage@calgarylibrary.ca.

THE MAKING OF A LIBRARY. THE SHAPING OF A CITY.

A look back on the true team effort behind the New Central Library.

Since time immemorial, libraries have played a critical role in cities and communities as places that connect people, knowledge and society. The New Central Library is uniquely positioned—both literally and figuratively—to connect Calgarians when it opens November 1, 2018, right on schedule.

Fourteen years in the making, the project brought together city planners, architects, engineers, designers and hundreds of others.

Not just a place to gather, learn and connect, the New Central Library building is also a portal from the vibrant residential neighbourhood of East Village to all the action of the downtown central core. The design of the building is fully intended to bridge these two parts of the city. Calgarians will be able to walk through the building any time of day, at any time of year, to go from one part of the city to the other.

As the organization tasked with delivering the NCL project, Calgary Municipal Land Corporation would like to recognize the dedication and sheer passion of the entire team behind the library:

- The City of Calgary, for a bold vision that enabled the project from inception
- Calgary Public Library for its commitment to building community through inspiring public spaces
- DIALOG and Snøhetta, the architecture firms responsible for the design, Stuart Olson for construction management, and Colliers for project management

Looking back, all involved agree that the library was a chance to really make a difference to the architectural landscape of the city. Now it's your turn. Mark your calendars for November 1 and be the first to experience our city's newest public space.

Don't forget to visit the new Central Library – opening on November 1

The Library is getting excited for our big move into the new Central Library in the East Village.

The current Central Library (616 Macleod Trail SE) will close on Friday October 26. Please visit calgarylibrary.ca for updates on programs and services that may be affected by our move.

- Regular service (except Local History) until 6 pm on October 12
- October 13-21 Main and 2nd floors only
- October 22-25 Main floor only
- From October 26 Central is closed
- November 1 NCL opens.
